THE SNIPE-SHOOTER'S ADVENTURE.

A Tale of Canada.

By Capt. Tolfrey, Author of 'the Sportsman in France,' and 'Sportsman in Canada.'

(Concluded)

'Was the injured father inactive during this long interval? The question is best answered by puting another, was a North American Indian ever known to permit an injury to remain unavenged? For days and nights had the broken hearted father persued the author of the grievous wrong inflicted on him—the despoiler of his domestic comforts, his darling child. With the stealth and caution which mark the Indian character, the chief sought his intended victim, and though often baffled in the attempt by the obstacles thrown in his way, such as large towns and populous villages, and frequent paths and highways he toiled dilligently, though for a long time fruitlessly, with a patience and perseverance that none but a denizen of the wilds can understand or accomplish.—The day of retribution did come however and chance so willed it that I should witness the closing scene of this appaling history.

I had been sent by my father beyond the Niagara frontier, in company with two American timber dealers, to open a negotiation for 'a clearance,' of which they were the proprietors, and to make a bargain also for bark and raft timber to be sent to Kingston. Having concluded and brought to satisfactory termination the object of my mission, I was returning home and as if the finger of Providence had directed my steps thither, an irresistible impulse led me towards the stupendous cataract, justly termed one of the wonders of the vast continent. I had, according to custom, been amusing myself with a gun as I pursued my way by the dark flowing water, and had killed several snipe and wild fowl, when my attention was arrested by a long, ringing, discordant yell, resembling the description I had heard of the death war whoop, as given by the Indian warriors in battle. On turning to the spot from whence this unusual sound proceeded, I could distinguish the forms of two men, the one on the ground as if relaxing his hold after a death struggle, and the other a tall athletic Indian bending over a prostrate form, the hair of the head remaining firmly in the hand. I approached cautionly, and fortunately unobserved, for had my presence been discovered my doom would have been sealed. I could now distinguish from behind a tree where I had concealed myself, a female form in the act of supplicating the conqueror in the recent struggle—the appeal was vain, for the fragile from was dragged towards the hut, where I could but faintly distinguish what was passing. Presently the tall and muscular Indian rushed from the wigwam, making the woods resound with his infernal yells, while he brandished a tomawhawk in his right hand, and held in his left a human scalp, which he savagely gloated on with the eyes and smile of a maniac. The chief was too much occupied with his barbarous achievement to notice me, although in his cooler moments my presence could not have escaped detection.—He passed within a few yards of the spot where I stood bounding like a deer. He was evidently making for the river—I followed him, but cautiously, as may well be imagined, as I was desirous to ascertain the meaning of the scene to which I had been an involuntary eye witness. He reached the bank about half a mile below the spot where his late exploit had been performed, and from among some sedges he dragged forth a canoe, into which he jumped. He then deliberately sat down lighted his pipe, and from the bottom of his frail bark he dragged forth a bottle, he appeared to drink freely of its contents, and having so done he pulled forth a blanket, and wrapping himself in it, he shoved the chiloe from the bank, and paddled into the centre of the rapid current. This to me was for a moment inexplicable as he was rushing to inevitable destruction.

'I need scarcely tell you, Pierro,' continued Francis 'that the Niagara, ere it reaches the fall, flows over an inclined plane some two or three miles above it, and that once within the influence of the impetous current no human power can arest the progress of any substance drawn within its irresistible power. But the self immolator was as unconcerned as if he were going to a marriage feast, instead of destruction. I ran as fast as my legs would carry me to see the termination of this harrowing scene. The Indian was immovable, save when he applied the bottle to his mouth—presently the buoyant little bark with its living freight whirled round with frightful rapidity while urged forward on its frightful course, again was it drawn by a hidden agency within the vortex of the turbid stream, and whirled round ere it was carried to the dark sheet of water immediately above the cataract.

Breathless, and all but stupefied by what was passing before my bewildered sight, I can just remember seeing the Indian and his canoe borne with the fleetness of the wind to the edge of the precipice, and suddenly disappear. The suicide met the death he courted with stoical indifference, draining the bottle (which contained rum) while rushing into the presence of his Maker. As a matter of course, he was carried into the foaming abyss below, and hidden beneath the boiling water. The body was found some three weeks afterwards, cast upon the pebbly shore below the unfathomable pool at the bottom of this stependous fall, the corpse was much mutilated, but a human scalp was found firmly fastened in the girdle of the Indian's belt. This, I need not tell you, was the scalp of Jackson, the seducer of his child.

"As soon as I had recovered my self-possession, I retraced my steps towards the hut where the first act of this horrid tragedy had been performed. On arriving within a few yards of the rude dwelling I found the body of my European acquaintance Jackson frightfully mutiloted, and minus his scalp, at the door, and against a post, a sickening sight was before me—that of a young and beautiful female strangled against a post: a cord with a noose had been thrown over her head, and three turns of the turns of the rope from the father's hand had too surely done the deed. The long-wished-for hour had arrived when a deeply rooted and long-cherished craving for revenge could be satisfied. I had to travel many miles ere I could procure assistance; the bodies we removed to the nearest township, and laid in one grave: and thus I draw the curtain over my promised tale, which I seldom repeat, and never without shuddering."

"This, Monsieur, was Francois' history and I hope you will agree with me in thinking that it is worthy of the title of 'The Snipe-shooter's adventure.'

LOVE OR MONEY.—BY BUZZ.

Bob Harney was a young man of very social temperament, and the fondness for society led him into associations, by no means improving either to his purity or his purse. He soon ran through his patrimony, but, having a kind brother, he was enabled to make another start in the world.

Again his habits reduced him, and again his brother assisted in his recovery. But what tyrants our evil practices are. Bob soon had additional evidence of this truth. His prodigality brought him down again, and to make his situation more desolate, his brother having determined to see what effect throwing him upon his own energies would have, refused him any farther aid.

"What shall I do now?" ruminated Bob. 'My brother has declined being my banker, and there is no other person I think of trusting in so responsible an office. I must take care of my own funds. Yes I see I must advocate the subtreasury. But the treasury is empty, and something must be done to increase the revenue.—Let's see, what shall it be? Overseering? No: that won't do, unless over my own negroes; and these I happen not to have just now. Hard work of some kind? This I could never endure. Speculation? Yes, that's the idea, but in what? Some capital might be necessary, and this, like my negroes 'has stepped out.' Ah! I have it now,' continued Bob, after a few moments deep reflection, 'I'll speculate in matrimony. A matter of money, just the thing for me.'

The next week found Bob in a fine carriage, drawn by a pair of excellent horses, with a driver and out riders to match. These he had succeeded in borrowing of his brother, and he was now out speculating in matrimony.

His course lay towards Charleston, and the second night after leaving home, came upon him just as he was opposite the residence of a rich widow, some miles from that city. The lateness of the hour was a sufficient apology for his requesting accommodations for the night. These were readily granted, and soon his heavy trunks that required two strong negroes to carry, were in the house, and himself seated at a cheering supper.

The lady was social. She knew his family by reputation, and from him learned that he was on his way to Charleston to purchase negroes, of which she thought the weight of his trunk good evidence.—His departure next morning was accompanied with an invitation to call upon his return. But a few days had elapsed when he was back. He reported the market unfavorable to present purchases and seemed disposed to visit while waiting for a change in it.

He remained in the neighborhood a few days, but these were enough in which to settle the fate of a rich young man in the estimation of that young widow. They were engaged. Bob postponed the purchase of negroes for the present, and began preparing himself for the wedding.

The matrimonial ceremonies were performed, and Bob, by promising im the duties of husband, became the master of a large fortune.

The next morning as the mild rays of the sun spread a brightness through their room the husband awoke raised himself upon his elbow, and, gazing intently upon the placid and handsome features of his wife seemed in deep reverie. He aroused himself, and imprinting a kiss upon her rose-bud lip, awakened her. "My dear," said Mr. Harney, repeating the delightful salutation, "my dear, have you married me for love or money?"

"For love, of course, my dear," said Mrs. Harney, throwing her soft arms around her husband's neck, and pressing him affectionately to her bosom, and very calmly said.

"Well then, I am exceedingly glad to hear it my dear.—for I have not got the first dime."

Bob sent back his brother's carriage, horses, driver and outrider; and of the "rooks" he had in trunks, made a pavement before the door, the stepping stone to his fortune, Finding herself sure enough married, his wife used every effort to make her husband happy and to be so herself nor did she fail. Bob made under tuition, an excellent husband, and cut off from old associations, became a man of superior domestic and business habits."

The man who dies immensely rich, dies a bankrupt in the books of benevolence. The fact proves that he has not lived as he ought. You shall learn by giving freely, that there is a value in money which you never dreamed of.

A clear conscince is sometimes sold for money, but never bought with it.

One of the best toasts said to have been drunk at the Printers Festival at Rochester, was the following:—

'The health of the man who pays in advance for his newspaper.

'A steamboat is being built to run on the sea of troubles.'

☞Prince de Joinville, in command of a French squadron, will visit our shores the coming summer.'

When you see a person continually barking at and abusing those possessed of influence, you may know that like a dog at the foot of a tree, he barks because he can't climb.

WASHINGTON CITY D. C.

SATURDAY APRIL 24, :::: 1847.

PARTY SPIRIT—OUR COUNTRY.

It is clearly understood that we have a country, and that it is divided into two great parties—the whigs and democrats. These are subdivided into two parties each: the democrats into demagogues and democrats. The whigs, and Church and State parties! Though all shelter themselves under the two great nominal heads, and commend or censure in their names.

So far as opinion goes of right and wrong, we have nothing to say, for all have a right to their opinion, and all who love their country will yield the right in politics and religion. But we like to see fair play, and shall unmask every knave and hypocrite, who under any pretence whatever, harbors evil against his country, such as the following:—

"WHIG DECENCY.—The Buffalo Express, a leading Mexican whig paper, speaking of the enrolment of volunteers for the army says—

'Able bodied men, who prefer a black eye to a clean collar, and had rather fight than eat, are the very men who should enter the army of a republic, to become food for powder. As the army fills up, the police reports diminish.'"

[Carrollton (Ohio) Picayune.

Here the two ultra parties meet, sub-rosa, the Church and State party. it will be perceived, is represented by the "Buffalo Express," the Picayune on the other hand, represents the demagogues, (as we shall show anon) which is clearly expressed by the words—"a leading Mexican whig paper."

Now we all know there is no such thing as a "Mexican paper" published in the United States, for to be Mexican it must be published in Mexico. Here is one falsehood detected.

On the other hand, the Express (as quoted) says—"able bodied men who prefer a black eye to a clean collar, and had rather fight than eat, are the very men who should enter the army of a republic to become food for powder!!!!!" And as if this fiendish spirit were not sufficient to show his uncompromising hatred, of a Republican Government—the gentleman ransacks the english language for words expressive of the rankest venum against his fellowmen, and the most flagrant slander, impious, and unprovoked falsehoods, against the U. S. Army, ever uttered by man, and this openly, the wretch has no shame. But why should he publish assertions that every one knows to be false?—Not so—his own party—ignorant—bigots believe him, the members of the "only true Church on earth," (as they call themselves) believe him.

Had this man power equal to his will, he would massacre a world if it stood in his way. The bounties of heaven and the beauties of nature are lost upon such demons. We know them of old. These are the Church and State party. These are the men under a thousand coverts, who rake land and sea for money to "send the gospel to the heathen," as they pretend. But out of their own mouths we condemn them,—"Able bodied men who prefer a black eye to a clean collar—rather fight than eat, are the very men," &c. Then he admits there are wicked men in the U. S., and that "as the army fills up, the police reports diminish."

By this he means to say that we, not only have wicked men in this Union, but of the most degraded, and licentious class viz., the vagabond, the thief, and night robber, found in the off-scourings of our cities, whose lawless acts require a strong police. Ah! and of such men, he means to say the U. S. Army is composed. Navy, he does say it. (What a christian!) Listen to this gentlemen of the army—ye undaunted volunteers, ye men of wealth, courage and respect. There is not an army in the world composed of more respectable men. many of them are personally known to us for years officers and soldiers viz., Generals Jessup, Quitman, Worth, Wool, and Colonels Shields, Kearney, Perry and May—we knew Col. M. from a child—Gen. Taylor we never had the pleasure to see.

But our main object in bringing these ultry parties faward, is to hold them up to the public, from their own testimony, while it is fresh in our memory. Both parties are dangerous to liberty, in as much as they aim at despotism.

Now these Church and State people defraud the poor, and ignorant out of vast sums of money, to spread the gospel among the heathen—as they say. But have we not just heard one of them—the Buffalo Express—stigmatize the people of his own country with the most abandoned wickedness? How does this happen? If they can convert the heathen to the christian religion, why have they not converted those wicked people he speaks of in the above extract?

Now for the Carrollton Ohio Picayune of the demagogue side. They are well matched and could "eat each other without salt." The Pic. comments thus—

"The wretch who wrote the above short paragraph deserves a clean collar of well soaped hemp, that would draw tight and admit of no relaxation. If these are the kind of men to enter the army of a republic, what kind of men would they have to enter the army of a monarchy."

This is true of both these parties, with the exception, that one covers its designs, with the name of religion, both hate republican governments, and both take shelter under two great parties.

The editor of the Pic. speaks of the opposition in the same style, and nearly in the same words as the writer of the article published in the Washington Union, during the session of Congress—we forget the signiture—for which the editor was expelled from the floor of the Senate, which was in amount that Mexico had a party in the United States Senate. This appears to be the stand taken by the demagogues "come weal or come wo."

They go a very round about way to reach their next door neighbour viz., taking Mexico in their way.

"What Is Said In Mexico.—We have on numerous occasions (says the Post) charged the leaders of the federal whig party with taking sides with the enemy and affording them "aid and comfort." Some few of the federalists pretended to be insulted at this, and flew into a terrible passion. To prove that our charges were true, we copied extracts from the speeches of federal congressmen, and federal newspapers. How the 'aid and comfort,' afforded by the Federalists here, are received in Mexico, will be seen by the following."

"Affording them aid and comfort"—Rather poor comfort we should think.

Here the editors of the Pic. quotes what the Mexicans say of "Daniel Webster and cowardly Jim Polk," already before the public.

Here is the way the demagogues get their information relative to their next neighbour.

From the Mexican Diario.

"By the late arrival from New Orleans we have been placed in possession of late papers from the United States, and a majority of them magnanimously denounce and condemn this war against this country as infamous, unholy, and unrighteous.'—Pic.

But why should people go so far abroad to learn what their neighbour says? "If the blind lead the blind both must fall into the ditch."

THE WIDOW BEDOTT.

What has become of the author of Widow Bedott? He who has delighted the readers of the Saturday Gazette? Can he not get up a new subject in the same style of nature's finest touches, of which the "Table Talk" of Widow Bedott was the truest specimen extant. These articles contain the most perfect painting of human nature, life and manners we ever met with, not excepting Sam Slick.

☞OUR FRIENDS.

At length we have had the pleasure to pay our respects to Hon. Judge Young, late Judge in Illinois, formerly a United States Senator from that state, and now Commissioner of the General Land office, in this city. There is less difference in the appearance of Judge Y. than in most people for the same number of years, it is since he first came into the U. S. Senate, a little fuller in the face perhaps, but the same tall commanding figure, over six feet and the same manly symmetry—not to be found perhaps in a thousand. His fine large dark eye of "melting charity," all same, and Mrs. Young we understand, is soon to arrive. It will be perceived that Judge Young and lady are amongst the most accomplished people from the Western states.

☞Hon. N. Clifford, Attorney General of the United States—We were sadly disappointed in not seeing this gentleman, he being in Cabinet session.

NEW CLERKS.

Charles Dummer Esq.

Mr. D. has been a Clerk in the Treasury Department upwards of six or seven years, though we never had the pleasure to see him, during that time, till last week. He is about middle age, being tall, near, if not quite six feet in height, with slender figure, and an easy, gentlemanly appearance. His face is oval, fair, and rather thin, with an open, deep forehead, smooth, and bland, where frown nor furrow never dwelt, while peace and contentment rests upon his cheery brow. He has light hair, a little touched with the frost of time.—His eye is a clear blue, full of that melting softness, that bespeaks a warm heart. His manners are of the old school, and shows the gentleman and the scholar.

We had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Dummer at Hallowell Maine, (where he then resided,) about twenty years ago.

N. H. Starbuck, esq.

Mr. S. is a new clerk in the same Department—at least he is new to us—never having seen him before. He is in the prime of life, a tall, stout, intelligent looking man, but being seated we cannot give an accurate description of his person. His hair is black as a raven, his face is round, rather so, of medium fullness—dark complexion, and manly features. His forehead is of common debth, and bespeaks independence and firmness of purpose.—His brow is a volume of expression, and displays an unshrinking mind, and great self control. His eagle eye is a dark hazel, keen, cool, and penetrating, and his countenance—steady, and unwavering indicates mind and decision. His manners have all the unassuming plainness of the Western people. He is from Ohio.

☞MISCELLANY.—We have been led off so this week by "Party Spirit." that no room is left for our friends—new papers &c.

COMMUNICATED.

The following was left with us for publication by a literary friend. We can hardly find room for it, but as it is to serve the oppressed, and the wronged one, as we understand it, we comply. It appears to be a love affair—a breach of promise, if we understand it. But we do not know the parties.

"MADAM:—Amongst the many beautiful ladies who visit this city, we have wondered you never made mention of—

Mrs. Levenia Marshall.

She is equally entitled to the same compliments; she lives in very secluded retirement, grieving for the absence of her "first love," a gentleman who met with her in the spring tide of youth, and made promises which he has not fulfilled. She was then, and is now, a beautiful creature, and she still trusts in him; but "hope deferred makes the heart sick."

She hopes this notice may fall into the hands of those who ought to take an interest in her situation, and that she may yet be happy.

JOHN LAW THROWN INTO THE SHADE.

Our readers are aware, doubtless, that there has, for some time past, been a Monster Scheme—a measureless Yankee Trick—to swindle Uncle Sam, his heirs and posterity to the remotest generation, out of Lands enough to match in length at least all those kingdoms which the Devil exhibited on the high mountan. The Arch contriver of this never-before-equalled project for annexing Territory, to pockets, by a rail road, is named Whitney. He proposes to control the construction of a Rail Road 2400 miles long—the United States to grant him Thirty Miles Wide of the Public Lands, on each side of the road, for its whole length—that every ten miles of the road shall, after it is completed, become the property of the United States until the whole is completed—Whitney & Co, to have the free use for their transportations—when completed (mark!) Whitney & Co. to have the road ——for what? ——"the mere paltry service of transporting uncle sam's troops stores &c., free of toll!" "le us see what comes next (I quote from Ryckman's speech reported in 'young america") and provided always, that it at any time, before or after the completion, the said Whitney and his associates, or their heirs or assigns shall pay or secure to be paid, to the government of the united states, the sum sixteen cents per acre for all the land granted to them for the purpose of contructing said road, then the road, [2400 miles long!] machinery, land and all shall revert to the said Whitney and his associates, their heir and assigns, and shall be their sole and exclusive properiy——for ever!!!!!"

It is hard for the mind to conceive that so gross an ass exists, to imagine that such a gigantic scheme of villany would be countenanced by a sane people: and it is equally inconceivable, that congress should have entertained it for an instant.

A Dutchman related a misfortune which befel his son in the following manner. "Poor Hans! he bit himself mit a rattle snake, and vash sick in his bed for six week, in te mouth of August—and all his cry vas Vater! Vater! Und he couldn't eat nothin' till he complained of peing a leetle better so ash he could stand up on his elbow and eat a little tea."

No. 18 south fourth street Philadelphia, has constantly on hand, a full supply of all the principal school books now in use, which he offers at reduced prices.

The Pictorial History of the U. States.

With notices of other portions of America by S. G. Goodrich, author of Peter Parley's Tales, for the use of schools. The main purpose of the work is to furnish a full, accurate, and just history of the Western Continent which may attract and render this subject a common school study throughout the land.—While, therefore it is full, in point of matter, it is so arranged as to be easily mastered by the pupil, and with no excessive demands upon the attention of the teacher. It will be remarked that the work is largely illustrated with engravings of scent and incidents, together with portraits and plain maps, designed to convey correct ideas of men and things, and at the same time taking care that the history shall be studied with accurate geographical notions.

Also, the Pictorial History of France, upon the same plan, and by the same author.

AN ACROSTIC.

'There is a bower of roses by Bendemeers Stream.'

On these roses enraptured the poet reclined.
But an Havana Cigar is more fragrant I ween
And inviting then bowers with roses entwined.
Come then, come the bower where Tyson resides.'
Come and puff off the cares of your business drives,
O'er this bower the Genius of smoking presides.

Segars of the finest from Cuba's bright Isle,
None here can equal, they're wondrous rare;
Under luxuries so fragrant, each care you beguile.
For they fly with the smoke and vanish in air.
For "tis clear and unquestionable," 'tis a genuine Cigar.

'And wield and high' the poets strain awoke,
Not cries of 'gathering,' but Havanna's smoke,
Dance gally o'er the head, as light as ether float.

Content with small profits, he solicits a hand
Invites you to call, he's determined to please,
Good Segars, good Tobacco, all of a good brand,
And at his establishment no one need sneeze,
Relying on friendship, disposed to be fair,
Solicits of custom a moderate share.
